City of Madeira Beach Maintains its Commitment to Seafood Festival

MADEIRA BEACH, FL – For more than 30 years the City of Madeira Beach has been the host community for the annual Seafood Festival, one of the most popular events in the state. Year after year, thousands of people have enjoyed live music, entertainment, browsing through the tents of hundreds of vendors and of course, the best seafood on the Gulf Coast.

Despite its popularity, the event organizers of the Seafood Festival have indicated through social media they no longer wish to host the event, and this will be the last one. Having demonstrated its commitment for over 30 years in the form of waiving fees for parking, street closings, etc., the news that this would be the last event comes as a surprise to City officials.

“Through the years, including this year, the City has consistently and enthusiastically worked with the organizers of the Seafood Festival to ensure this immensely popular event goes as smoothly as possible,” said Jonathan Evans, City Manager. “We remain committed to the Seafood Festival and look forward to doing whatever we can to make sure this event happens each and every year in Madeira Beach.”

The 37th Annual John’s Pass Seafood Festival is scheduled for October 25-28 at John’s Pass Village in the City of Madeira Beach.
